GUIDE 01

Invite Someone Along

Good things are worth sharing.

Found a PIAPI activity that makes you curious, gets you thinking or promises a little harmless nonsense? Sounds like a good reason to invite someone along.

You don't need a special occasion, a perfectly planned afternoon or an impressive collection of craft supplies. Just an idea and someone you'd enjoy sharing it with.

Make the First Move

Think about who might enjoy the experience. A friend, cousin, neighbor, grandmother, daughter or someone you'd simply like to know better.

Already have your person in mind? Excellent. Now comes the very complicated business of asking.

An Invitation With Personality

> "I have an idea. It involves creativity, absolutely no special talents, possibly a little nonsense and personal growth disguised as a good time. You in?"

OR KEEP IT SIMPLE:

"I found something I think we'd enjoy doing together. Want to try it?"

Make It Your Own

Keep it casual.

Pick a Growing Is Gorgeous card and see where it takes you. No preparation required unless the activity calls for it.

Make an occasion of it.

Add snacks, music or a favorite gathering spot. Suddenly, an ordinary afternoon has possibilities.

Mix generations.

Invite someone older or younger. Different experiences can make the conversation even more interesting.

Let everyone have a say.

Take turns choosing activities, changing the rules or suggesting what happens next.

A Little Good Company Etiquette

An invitation isn't an obligation. Make it easy to decline, observe, skip a question or participate differently.

Personal stories belong to the people who share them. Respect privacy, preferences and boundaries.

When minors participate, adults should provide appropriate guidance, supervision and permissions.

And Then?

Try another card. Plan an adventure. Start a little tradition.
Or simply enjoy the fact that you spent some good time together.

Ready to make it a regular thing? See Guide 02: Start Your Own Gathering.

Come for the cards.
Stay for the company.

Pretty is a Practice.
